ARBEIT MACHT FREI

A black and white historical photograph showing the entrance to a concentration camp. A large, arched metal sign spans the top of the entrance, bearing the German phrase "ARBEIT MACHT FREI" (Work makes free). The sign is supported by two tall, dark metal pillars. Below the sign, a dirt road leads into the camp. On the left, a person in a dark coat and light shirt stands near a wooden gate. In the background, several simple, rectangular buildings are visible, along with a bare tree and a utility pole. A sign on one of the buildings in the distance appears to say "Küche" (Kitchen). The overall scene is desolate and institutional.
